Aikagaii is a story about two friends and their struggles to sort out their feelings in a unique situation. Though it tells a simple story, the warm atmosphere in this game will make you burst into laughter. Key Features: - A story of self-discovery - More than 10 ways to complete the story. - The story is played in 1st or 2nd Person. There exist a number of prior art optical configurations for detecting defects and damage in rolled materials. In general, these systems comprise either an emissive material or a reflective material in one or more planes of the rolled material. One system for detecting surface defects in a rolled material is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,168,131 (Milonni). This system uses a scanning head which projects a beam of light at a plurality of predetermined points on the surface of the rolled material. A plurality of photosensitive devices, i.e. photodiodes, is mounted in an optical plane between the surface of the rolled material and the scanning head. These photodiodes are operatively connected to a data processor that provides analog electrical signals indicative of the intensity of light received by the photodiodes. The analog electrical signals are converted to digital signals and analyzed for determining whether any defect in the surface of the rolled material is present. A more pertinent prior art device is found in U.S. Pat. No. 4,628,106 (Kaler). This patent discloses the use of one or more photodiodes for determining the temperature of a particular point of a rolled material. This photodiode or plurality of photodiodes are arranged such that the light emitted by the photodiode passes through a fiber optic cable and detects the light received by the photodiode. Another prior art system for detecting damage on a rolled material is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,817,302 (Melko). This patent discloses a plurality of photodiodes for receiving light reflected off the surface of a rolled material. The photodiodes are arranged in a square matrix pattern. Each of these prior art systems suffers from the disadvantages of either requiring a high power laser for scanning in the Milonni patent or a fragile fiber optic cable for delivering light from the surface of the rolled material to a single light detector in the Kaler patent. It is desirable to eliminate these disadvantages. It is therefore the object of this invention to provide an

Re: Trying to leave my house i love this story and i want to be totally honest i don't think you need any shipping as i feel like i'm falling in love with you character by character. i just want to support your writing and i think i will grow to love every character this way. Re: Trying to leave my house Thanks for the feedback so far! You're the first person to give me some positive feedback for this story since I first started writing it, and that's really great to hear. I really feel like it's definitely not what I would've come up with on my own, though, and I'm happy to know that you were able to make it feel like home, even if only for a little while. Thank you so much for the support, and I'm sure I'll be able to continue with you on this story in the future. In a piece for the Washington Post, it was revealed that a military doctor killed two people in three days, due to a lack of sleep. Dr. Robert Bales, an Army doctor who killed a dozen people in Afghanistan, was experiencing sleep deprivation at the time of the massacre. Apparently, military psychologists had warned that this could happen. In any case, Dr. Bales killed 17 people on the night of March 11th, 2009, and then committed suicide in his jail cell that afternoon. Update, February 16th, 2010: Now we know how his brain works. From the FBI's website: "[Dr. Bales'] brain was in an altered state of consciousness." It was his "insane condition" that "lead to the tragic events that occurred." Dr. Bales had consumed alcohol, marijuana and amphetamines that night, according to the FBI. Dr. Bales' brain showed that the areas that normally restrain a person from harming others were not functioning properly. "The brain normally defends itself by keeping a lid on violent impulses through inhibitory mechanisms," according to FBI spokeswoman Vicki Anderson. "Bales' brain did not have access to these mechanisms. "The action is out of the blue," said Col. Mark Sinko, the Army doctor who interviewed Dr. Bales at a military hospital in Kuwait three days after the massacre. Dr. Bales "was sleep-deprived
