A circle whose circumference is to the outside of the circle is drawn. It is determined that the area within the circle is  $1220\text{cm}^2$ . What is the area of the square that is inside the circle? A: The side of the square is a diameter of the circle. Hence, the area is  $1220 \cdot \frac{1}{2}\pi = 602\pi \text{ cm}^2$  Q: Reusing SparkContexts or Sharing Contexts or...? I want to use Spark for computations that are not critical, but I want to reuse my/our data in multiple jobs. So I wonder if I can "kill" the Spark context? Meaning I do not create a new one for each job? I could just use the same SparkSession to create the context and share it for reuse (and then just create a new SparkSession to get access to the context when it's going to be executed again)? Is there a different way of doing it? A: You can use a shared SparkContext. There is no need to "kill" it. You'll have to use the shared one, but you can share as many components (SparkRDDs, SparkSession etc) as you want from the context. You can just create a new SparkSession for your new jobs and retrieve the context from the old one. If you really want to kill the context, you can use SparkContext.stop().

Fine structure of the binding layer of the mandibular gland in the Bufo melanostictus. The binding layer (BL) of the mandibular glands in Bufo melanostictus consists of a single layer of mucous cells arranged from the base of the BL to the surface of the BL. The cells contain numerous secretory granules that are separated from the basolateral membrane, and this type of cell has been suggested to be involved in the secretion of glycoproteins from the secretory granules. In the present study, we compared the ultrastructural characteristics of the mucous cells to clarify their function. The secretory granules in the mucous cells had diameters of 50
