One more question, is there anyway i can directly register my IP on this site? Or any suggestion to use this instead? A: If a particular page that you're viewing is using an iFrame containing a tracker, you can generally just remove it from the page (the iFrame) and be done with it. If it's a tracker in a page that's opened in an iframe, the only way around this is to add the offending HTML code to your web server (or use a domain that cannot be scanned) so that the page is opened by a client that is not a victim of a particular web site owner. Note that if the iFrame is javascript, a javascript function which can only be loaded from a specific domain, changing the domain being used to load the JS might stop a tracker from loading. Note also that a web browser including a web browser extension like Chrome's "NoScript" can prevent JavaScript from being loaded from pages. Note that you should really remove the iFrame as much as possible. Note that you can use a browser like Tor to connect to a site and block it. The above point is particularly true for you, because in your scenario, the site you're
